SAVE, VALUE, CREATE, IMAGINE

"There is no contradiction between creation and heritage conservation. On the contrary. Thinking about transformation and adaptation also means making the most of existing resources, technical and cultural, in a quest to reduce the ecological footprint of human activities. From the cultural point of view as well as from the environmental point of view, it is gradually getting out of the disposable logic in favor of the recyclable and the repairable. These interventions of today can be discrete or on the contrary assert themselves. In any case, they interact with what already exists. "Franck Riester

For three days, the National Days of Architecture, coordinated in regions by the Regional Directorate of Cultural Affairs, federate many actors in the field *, public and private, engaged in the culture and politics of the city around the issues of the 'contemporary architecture.
