USPA NEWS - France is more and more struck by urban violence and domestic violence, feminicide, and by rather barbaric acts and whose aggressors are often repeat offenders, released by the courts (Example Chahinez Case) or even not at all judges by justice (Example Sarah Halimi Case). The savage aggression is yet another brawl between rival gangs coming from Saint-Michel-sur-Orge and the neighboring town of Sainte-Geneviève-des-Bois., In Essonne (20 miles from Paris center). The worry is growing among parents, citizens and elected politicians, as attacks between young people are more and more frequent with attackers increasingly young and armed. Polls, recent, like that of IFOP, of April 27, 2021, "Security" is considered "very priority" with 72% (up 4 points) and 70% (stable) of the French, even ahead of the fight against unemployment (68%) and the fight against insecurity despite the looming economic crisis (62%). As for justice, the French are according to the CSA CNews survey carried out on May 27, 2021, they are 81% to think that justice in France is too lax. On the political side the Minister of Justice Eric Dupond Moretti, who had to receive the police unions, (the day before) which themselves require more material and legislative means and protection to safeguard their lives, it is not of agree with this opinion of "lax justice" and responds with figures: There has been "an increase in the number of firm prison sentences (132,000 sentences handed down in 2019 against 120,000 in 2015), the French are therefore far from being convinced. Among them, the youngest are those most pointing out the lack of severity of justice, with 83% of 18-24 year olds and 88% of 25-34 year olds.
