Ms. George Paul Langevin, Minister for Overseas (previously Minister Delegate of Education, responsible for the educational success from May 2012 to March 2014) made a statement before handing the prize to the winner of the APFEE "The Grand Orient created a Foundation to provide the means of action for solidarity towards the most important social justice until today that the Foundation is to help educational projects. The Secularism and education are values of the republic and guarantee the equality of all and the autonomy of each. I know this AFPEE association, when I worked alongside with Vincent Peillon (Former Minister of Education), and we encouraged equal opportunities and the fight against illiteracy. It is a fight that is close to my heart and for which we have worked with Mr Peillon to encourage and considered as a national project.

Among school children, 7% are "illiterate" and with 500 to 700 000 children at risk of dropping if for them there was no catch-up time and time delay of the bases. It is impossible to get it back over to illiteracy of children, even by parents. The tutoring is insufficient at this level.

It is our responsibility as citizens by restoring trust between the child and Education, and parents.

France has taken action to ensure that equality of opportunity is a relationship to building bridges between school children and schools for the course leading to success because 90% of children are in a fragile of reading and writing academic failure.

The moral elevations of the children, forge later the creative field workers for their longer remarkable work in France. I'm grateful to these members today." Said the minister Mrs George Paul Langevin.
